

UAB Sparkman Center Seminar Series in Global Health

Summer 2008 research experience: Predictors and Adequacy of Treatment of Anemia among Pregnant Women in Westmoreland, Jamaica

Alyson M. Charles

“My field experience taught me that classroom knowledge doesn’t always translate perfectly on the job. At times, one must be willing to step outside of his or her comfort zone to accomplish the task at hand. I also learned that the ability to relate to different kinds of people with varied backgrounds is essential for any public health professional; and this is why I believe that international health relations is so important.”

“Great experiences are a compilation of learning, enjoyment, challenges, success, and personal growth. With this realization, I can truly look back on my summer in Jamaica and say, that was a great experience!”

Monday November 10, 2008

11:15 —12:15

Room 107, Ryals School of Public Health

Lunch will be served

Bring your own drinks